Welcome to the London Symphony Orchestra's 2012/13 Season

This season the LSO celebrates two important LSO conductor birthdays: our President Sir Colin Davis is 85 in September 2012, and our Principal Conductor Valery Gergiev is 60 in May 2013, and both conductors offer something really special in celebration.

Leonidas Kavakos is the UBS Soundscapes: LSO Artist Portrait and Mark-Anthony Turnage the LSO Composer Focus this season, and we are also able to bring you short residencies with cellist Yo-Yo Ma, violinist Nikolaj Znaider and composer John Adams. Bernard Haitink and Maria João Pires return to continue their musical partnership with the LSO, Antonio Pappano gives his only London symphonic concerts in 2012/13, and Sir John Eliot Gardiner celebrates his own 70th birthday with the LSO in April.

As ever, we are delighted that BBC Radio 3 has programmed a year-round series of lunchtime chamber music at LSO St Luke's, which is celebrating with a Tenth Birthday Festival at Easter 2013; there are many opportunities to get closer to LSO artists, and to find out more about the music in the LSO season there.

Kathryn McDowell
LSO Managing Director

Valery Gergiev 2012/13: Brahms and Szymanowski

Valery Gergiev's programming brings together some of the most inspiring pieces ever written for symphony orchestra and chorus, and provides an authoritative guide to two contrasting European figures – Brahms and Szymanowski. Brahms' music, part-Romantic, part-Classical but always stirring and lyrical, has long been a staple of the repertoire, but in recent years late-Romantic Polish composer Karol Szymanowski has been emerging from the shadows, with the sheer opulence and exotic sensuousness of his music winning over an increasingly wide audience. Gergiev explores the four symphonies of both composers, as well as the great German Requiem by Brahms and Szymanowski's exquisite Violin Concertos and influential Polish take on the Stabat Mater.

UBS Soundscapes: LSO Artist Portrait Leonidas Kavakos

Leonidas Kavakos was destined to be a violinist. His father and grandfather both played, and Kavakos was the youngest member of the European Union Youth Orchestra at the age of twelve, and won the Sibelius Competition aged 16. He now plays with all the major orchestras, directs his own Athens festival, and recently became Artistic Director of the Camerata Salzburg. But he has also been shaped by his Greek identity. 'When we do something with devotion and concentration, it is a kind of music', he says. 'And this explains something ancient in our heritage. You know what they taught in ancient Greek times? They taught grammar, they taught mathematics, they taught gymnastics, and they taught music! It was at the centre of education, because music touches the whole person.'

Sir Colin Davis at 85

In his 85th birthday year Sir Colin Davis focuses on composers with whom he is particularly associated. Mozart and Schubert bookend the series, and in between there is a particular focus on English composers – Elgar, Walton and Britten – as well as his beloved Sibelius and Beethoven. He is joined by musical luminaries such as Mitsuko Uchida, Radu Lupu, Ian Bostridge, Dorothea Röschmann, Elisabeth Leonskaja, Maxim Vengerov and Nikolaj Znaider, a roll-call of his friends in the music world for over 60 years.

Britten, Shostakovich and Copland

Three major 20th-century composers who each helped define the national musical profile of their respective countries are brought together by former LSO Principal Conductor Michael Tilson Thomas and superstar cellist Yo-Yo Ma. Benjamin Britten and Dmitri Shostakovich were linked by friendship and mutual respect for one another and for the man who first introduced them, the cellist Mstislav Rostropovich, and it is the great works for cello and orchestra they wrote for this exceptional musical personality that run like a thread through this three-concert series. The music of the composer Aaron Copland is rarer in the concert hall, but speaks no less of its time and place, with a spare-textured and picturesque style suggestive of America's wide open spaces.

21st Century Voices

The LSO has always worked with musicians that define their generation, and this season the LSO Composer Focus is with Mark-Anthony Turnage, and we are performing one UK and four world premieres. In April, French conductor Francois-Xavier Roth has curated LSO Futures, a week of contemporary music events at the Barbican and LSO St Luke's. Also in 2012, the LSO launches a new initiative, Soundhub at LSO St Luke's, for 25 talented composers to develop their work through workshops, collaboration and mentoring.
